

Episode 1:

Gone Fishing

When someone in our life dies, we don't lose them all at once. There are memories and reminders everywhere, and that can help us keep our loved ones in our hearts. Unfortunately, it can also make the path to healing confusing at times. Even though it's been almost a year, there are days when it doesn't seem real to Louis Ray. Like today.

Louis Ray

Louis Ray is a fairly typical nine-year-old pine marten. Between school, soccer, and fishing, he has a lot on his plate. He also has a lot on his mind – the one-year anniversary of his mom's death is right around the corner, and every now and again he forgets she is gone.

Dad

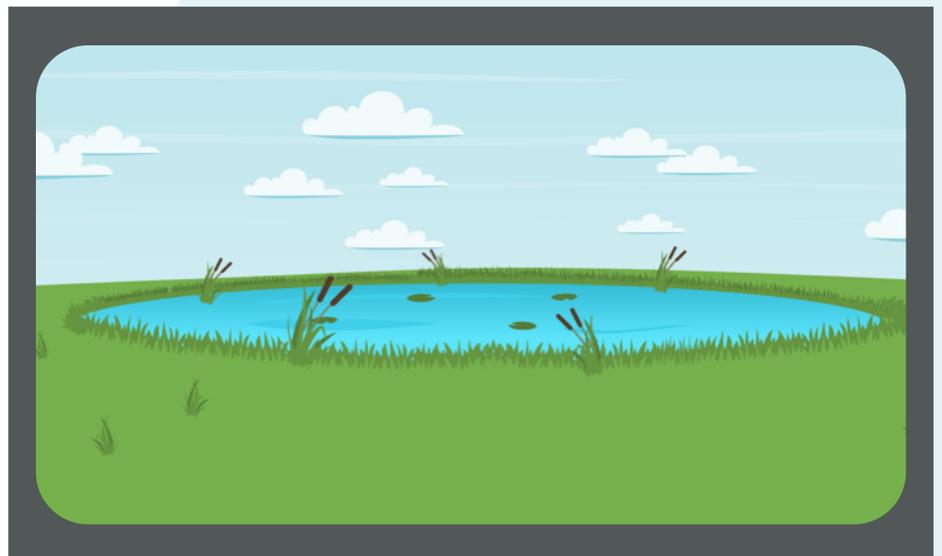

Louis Ray's dad feels the loss as well. Every day. He's doing everything he can to be there for Louis Ray, and one of the best things he does is admit that he doesn't always know what to do.

Mom

Even though someone dies, they don't leave our lives. Louis Ray's mom is still watching over him, and the fishing trip shows Louis Ray how much she is still by his side.

Elsie Diamond

A new friend? Louis Ray doesn't know this mysterious fishing partner yet, but he will. He will also quickly learn how much the two of them have in common.

Did that really happen?

Understanding the reality of your loved one's death.

When someone close dies, we often struggle to accept that this is our reality. Our head understands that our person is gone forever, but it takes a while for our heart to catch up. This is often the first task we must work through before grief work can begin. Gaining this understanding provides the foundation for the remaining pieces of the grief puzzle to come together.

Five Factoids:

Dad

1. Everyone's grief journey is unique, even within the same family. Each person's feelings of grief are important and valid.
2. It can take time to feel like doing the things you used to do with your person who died. How long it takes is up to you.
3. Remembering can be difficult, but it also helps us to know that our relationship with the person who died never ends. Our memories live forever.
4. The people who love us won't always do everything right, but it's important to remember that they want to help us heal.
5. Helping the reality settle on children is different than for adults. Allowing children to tell their story of the death through acting and play is extremely helpful.
